

YALE PRISON EDUCATION INITIATIVE

at Dwight Hall at Yale, Center for Public Service and Social Justice

YPEI Call for Fellows, Summer 2021

Brief Summary:

Summer fellows assist in coordinating YPEI programming, including orienting, managing, and liaising with course instructors, guest lecturers, and volunteers; providing administrative and operations assistance including materials management; assisting with fundraising and social media; and working with community partners and formerly incarcerated students on student re-entry in New Haven and local initiatives based around criminal justice reform.

Depending on the fellowship awarded and the associated conditions, YPEI can accommodate both full-time and part-time fellowships.

Description:

This summer, YPEI at Dwight Hall enters its fourth year of offering Yale courses and programming to incarcerated students in Connecticut. To date, YPEI has fulfilled its mission by serving incarcerated students inside state correctional facilities with both credited and uncredited academic programming, and by working with formerly incarcerated students in the New Haven area. Summer 2021 marks a moment of transition and expansion for our program as we aim to admit a new cohort of students; expand programming; pilot videoconferencing technology to offer remote classes inside CT DOC given the ongoing constraints of the pandemic; install a new fellowships program centered at Yale for formerly incarcerated students; and develop a degree partnership in New Haven so that we can begin to offer an associate's degree for incarcerated students in the state.

Summer fellows will have a range of core summer projects to choose from, depending on their interest matched with our needs, as well as a slate of regular duties and responsibilities to form a base for that work, which will also orient the fellow to our specific program as well as help them acquire a solid understanding of the broader national field of higher education in prison.

Regular duties and potential summer projects (all remote) include:

- Coordinating with course instructors and incarcerated students on materials, assignments and assignment submission to support core programming. This involves determining materials and supplies needed by both students and faculty, procuring them, and facilitating their delivery to incarcerated students.
- Keeping YPEI's public-facing and staff calendars updated.
- Drafting regular newsletters for YPEI subscribers and for incarcerated students.
- Maintaining and updating YPEI website including writing and publishing blog posts, sharing relevant news articles, and drafting press releases.
- Gathering testimony and feedback from incarcerated students and from campus faculty/volunteers in coordination with research partners.

YALE PRISON EDUCATION INITIATIVE

at Dwight Hall at Yale, Center for Public Service and Social Justice

- Managing and updating YPEI's "Job Board" that serves formerly incarcerated job-seekers and people interested in jobs in the field of higher education in prison.
- Assisting with YPEI's Transcription Network, currently comprised of over fifty Yale undergraduates and graduate students who may be dispersed around the world over the summer period, but who volunteer their time to type YPEI students' handwritten essays into Microsoft Word documents. This involves loading student essays onto our internal server to make them available to volunteer transcribers, assigning them to transcribers, and then coordinating to ensure proper digital delivery to instructor/students as needed.
- Assisting with the YPEI research request network, which supports incarcerated students in research projects, independent studies, materials needs, and miscellaneous requests. This may include procuring extra writing tutors, or subject-specific tutorials or guides depending on student needs that arise and in concert with on-campus academic resources including through our partners at the Poorvu Center for Teaching and Learning.
- Helping organize supplementary workshops from Yale and the New Haven community, either remotely using videoconferencing or by correspondence (snail mail). This task relies on the creativity and vision of the individual fellow, and their ability to connect and communicate with potential guest speakers and to coordinate and curate viable workshops for incarcerated students.
- Possibility of organizing a public-facing virtual event (for either Summer or Fall 2021) to highlight YPEI program activity and student and faculty accomplishments.
- Virtually attending New Haven meetings, events, and roundtables related to prisons and re-entry, such as the New Haven Re-entry Round Table and the Women's Resettlement Working Group.
- Assisting in coordination with New Haven-based and statewide re-entry and other support organizations in building strategies to support the success of our increasing number of returning students. This may also involve researching reentry strategies and partnerships at other prison education programs, and coordinating with local colleges to help students continue their educational attainment.
- Participating in building a new fellowships program to place formerly incarcerated alumni of regional higher education in prison programs in fellowship sites at Yale.
- Possibility of providing grantwriting and development assistance.

Skills/experience required for this work:

The ideal candidate should have excellent writing skills, be a good communicator (comfortable using the telephone), be comfortable with light technological assistance, be hard-working, problem-solving, and mature. The ideal candidate will be passionate about access to higher education in prison and criminal justice reform, and be comfortable working with a wide variety of stakeholders (although no past experience working in criminal justice is necessary).

Fellow will have access to robust YPEI staff orientation and training which will familiarize them with the operations of a rigorous college-in-prison program and help them gain an understanding of the national field both historically and in contemporary iterations. Fellow will be provided with tools for training and reflection and access to academic and knowledge partners across the university and community partners and leaders in our city, state, and region.

YALE PRISON EDUCATION INITIATIVE

at Dwight Hall at Yale, Center for Public Service and Social Justice

YPEI will provide fellow with all necessary software and information required to do the work described, including access to business email and phone number. Fellow will be added to our organizational Slack account and central databases for access to program information and to facilitate ease of communication with other staff and fellows. An active summer staff serves both as a supportive community with whom the fellow can collaborate as well as a resource for achieving summer goals.

Past Summer Fellows Hosted at YPEI:

In Summer 2017, YPEI engaged three undergraduate fellows — funded by the Schell Center at Yale Law School, Yale Education Studies Program, and Dwight Hall Summer Fellowship — who were crucial to developing community relationships for YPEI. One fellow produced a researched report on higher education access in prison as seen through the international human rights law. All three collaborated on producing a volunteer training manual that is still used by volunteers in our program and at the Yale Undergraduate Prison Project.

In Summer 2018, YPEI engaged two undergraduate fellows — one funded by the Liman Center at YLS and a second funded by Dwight Hall Summer Fellowship — who were crucial in executing our first summer of offering classes. Fellows fulfilled all responsibilities listed above, while helping to form the operational rhythm of our program across two correctional facilities.

In Summer 2019, we worked with four undergraduate fellows — funded by Dwight Hall Summer Fellowship and the Yale DSA — who helped us expand our programming and who delved into projects varying from reentry to program organization and streamlining, to orienting and recruiting new volunteers and guests, to providing direct tutoring assistance to YPEI students. YPEI offered six total courses in summer 2019.

In Summer 2020, we worked with undergraduate fellows funded by the Dwight Hall Summer Fellowship, YANA-Dwight Hall Summer Fellowship, the President's Public Service Fellowship, and the DSA, who worked largely on facilitating correspondence-based (snail mail) programming for incarcerated students amid the challenges of the pandemic and planning upcoming programming and partnerships. You can read more about YPEI's creative writing workshop here. Additional graduate student fellows were funded and placed by the Yale Divinity School Internship Program and Columbia University's Tamer Center for Social Enterprise at Columbia Business School.

Past Academic Year Fellows:

During the academic year, fellows have worked with YPEI through fellowships funded by the Yale University Library; Yale Center for the Study of Race, Indigeneity and Transnational Migration; the Department of Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies; and the American

YALE PRISON EDUCATION INITIATIVE

at Dwight Hall at Yale, Center for Public Service and Social Justice

Studies Department. Additional undergraduate student fellows have worked with YPEI during the academic year as a placement site of Dwight Hall's Urban Fellows program and First-years in Service of New Haven Program. YPEI has also engaged over 100 undergraduates in regular year-round volunteering, including through the transcription network and the research request network.

During the academic year, graduate students have participated in YPEI as Graduate Professional Development Fellows (PTAI) and Graduate Professional Experience Fellows.

In 2019-2020, undergraduate student editors of the Yale Daily News worked with our students on writing op-eds published in the YDN, and another collective of undergraduates from Yale's Ethnicity Race & Migration Program conceived of, organized, and facilitated a semester-long seminar series bringing together ER&M faculty to work with our students in prison.

***

Undergraduate and graduate students alike have regularly noted that working with YPEI was a highlight of their entire Yale experience that provided them with mentorship opportunities, a supportive team environment, opportunities for personal and professional growth, and a way to leverage their Yale affiliation to serve our local community and to fight for the right of higher education access for incarcerated students in our state.

Contact

S. Zelda Roland, PhD
Founding Director, Yale Prison Education Initiative at Dwight Hall
(203) 432-9286
s.zelda.roland@yale.edu